- Kenya's National Environment Management Authority (NEMA) recently issued tough regulations aimed at curbing pollution and protecting the environment.
- NEMA Director General Ayub Macharia and Nairobi Provincial Commissioner Njoroge Ndirangu have announced that all buildings that discharge waste to the environment will be declared uninhabitable and forced to close down. Quarries operating without NEMA certification will also be shut within six months and car washes near bodies of water and those operating without a NEMA license have been ordered to shut down immediately.
- The Kenyan government has enacted many other measures in recent years to protect the environment, including clean energy and reforestation projects throughout the country.
